REMARKS on Several Champions.

HE Champion of Olisher the 21st gives us nothing worth Notice, but a Letter to Moll Mackarel, to shew his Proficiency in the Dialect of Billing state, which was entirely needless; the World having been long convinced that he can write in no other Stile.

The Ghampion of October 17th contains more curious Discoveries; to wit, the Truth is the Privilege of the People, and Kings are come at it without sending for the Champion to that them; that near sighted Men cannot see at a time; that People thick of Hearing cannot tell that sidd of them; and what is still more wonder that a low, mean, tricking Creature, with the fain of a Smithfield Jockey, has for many Years deside prosoundest Wit, and the most sublime Wishe, of all his Opposers.

2). How it comes to pass that Modern Patriots, all the Wit on their Side, should be always outen; and that the greatest Abilities should never may success in a Contention with the meanest?

2. Whether the Champion does not bely his own mitions; and whether he was never taught by the me Oracle of the Faction, by B——he bimfelf, and Honourable Person whom he thus infamously then, u, as he consesses him to be in his Differtance, u, as he consesses him to be in his Differtance, a Partie, a Man of extreme good Parss, and a billion great Experience; endowed with the greatest lilies, with every Talent that God has given to mue the Good of Mankind; as is also acknowed by a much abler Writer of the same Party? The Champion, after a Common-Place Harangue hat Royal Puppets and Wicked Ministers, further turn us, that when the Sovereign, or his Ministers, the from the Original Compact, We, the People, are Right to set forth our Grievances, and petition teleficial.

Q Why does not this Defamer tell us, in what our meniga or his Ministers have broke the Original hapat; and what we, the People, are to petition a: Whether it be for a greater Liberty of Consciut, for a better Security of Person and Property, or it larger Indulgence to the Licentiousness of the

The Champion next frankly confesses the great Grieup his Ministers without a Cause. The King, he a, ought to give up his Ministers to the Clamours their Enemies, tho' they come attended with no the hard with no one Evidence of their this Honess Writer, the Crimes of butter by be of a Mysterious Nature, of a Commed Nature, not easily to be discover'd, not easily to medigated: Therefore, it should be sufficient thing, but to have his Servants access'd, to deliver p Sacrifice to their Enemies. A King should the Minifers, says this Righteour Champion, as Cafar the Wife, guilty or not guilty he should turn them if Doors upon the first Slander that should be dagainst them: Condemn them sirst, and let them ty'd afterwards, fays this Upright Patriot; and I were most fincerely, that the Champion here speaks in the Bottom of his Heart, that the very Soul of the Patriotism breathes thro' him, that nothing the price them so much as to see a Prince on the lime of such a week. e of fuch a weak, unfleady, unkingly Difpofihere recommend: One that would difhin Faithful Servants, because their Enemies rean Faithful Servants, because their islicings and because those who labour'd to supplant in spoke Evil of them. Such a Prince would make Withes of Modern Patriots, of the Faction such the Government. He would, as the Champion commends, dismis a Bosom Wife, like Casfar, Income Castar Cas test or Guilty; he might too, like Cofar, give it a keefon for the greatest Tyranny and Injustice, it was sufficient the Person was accus'd; he might such a Conduct sacrifice his ablest, his sincerest nds, his most faithful Servants: But would fuch a ikkness of Heart and Head procure him either Quiet sheety? Would not such a Reign be like the trou-d Sea? Was it by such Maxims the Prosperity, the standard of Elizabeth's Reign was established? a it not by Maxims quite the Reverse? Was it not by well understanding the Benefit of having her Miniflers grow grey in her Service, by despising the Suggestions of Envy and Ill-Will, and the Calumnies that Malice rais d against them, that she saw herself reign with greater Quiet and Glory than did ever any Monarch who acted upon less steady Principles?

The Champion of October 25th, after having gravely observ'd, that the Nation is so deprav'd that a Man must be an Hercules indeed to take the Field against them, and more than an Hercules to get the Victory over them, introduces, by a strange Perversion of Roman History, the Contention between Cicero and the Tribune Rullus, as calculated for Home-application.

Surely never was Scribbler fo unhappy in his Applications! for Rullus was really the Champion of his Times, a feditious Demagogue, a Tribune of the People, who, under pretence of ferving the Roman People, and procuring an Agrarian Law, a Bill at that time of day much more famous among the Romans, and more popular than the Place-Bill is among us, had form'd a Design to deprive great Numbers of the Romans of their Votes and Liberties; Ciceno, then Conful, and venerable for his Support of the Confular Dignity and Senatorial Authority against feditious Tribunes and popular Orators, saw thro' the Design of this specious and popular Law, as he calls it himself, and effectually defeated it, by shewing the People, that if Rullus's Scheme took place, no less than Sixteen Tribes of the Roman People must be deprived of their Suffrages, which the Romans valued too highly and too justly to part with for any Decoy whatsoever.

Quer. 1. Whether there be any Senator in Great Britain that is a popular RULLUS, and who he is?

Quer. 2, Whether the Champion be a CICERO?
Quer. 3. What would the Conful Ciecro have faid to a Bill like our Patriot Place-Bill, that was defign'd to have taken from every Voter in his Country their Right of Choice; that was defign'd to firip the ablest Senators of their Posts, tho confirm'd in them by the Voice and Election of the People?

Cicere observes in his Oration against Rallus, that in his Days there was continual War between the Consular Dignity and Tribunitial Power, because that brave and honest Conful had often defeated the Seditions of wicked and turbulent Tribunes of the People; but what then would Cicero have faid to fuch incendiary Orators, fuch felf-made Tribunes of the People as are the Pett of our Times! What would Cicero have faid to a Craftiman, a Common Sense, a Champion, to Men who were hired, and made a Trade of defaming the Consular Dignity and Senatorial Authority? Such as these Men are now, were the Catalines and the Rulli of Rome; their Mouths were full of Love for their Country, their Pretences were Zeal for Liberty, the Promotion of Agrarian Laws, and the Defence of the People, as now our Demagogues cry up Place Bills and other Innovations; but Cicero desery'd, through all their specious Pretences, their private Ambition and latent Malice; Cicero defeated them all, therefore they were against Cicero, therefore they were Foes to his Fortunes and sworn Enemies to his Power; they defam'd him as an Engroffer of Power, a Controller of the Senate; they collogued and flatter'd the People, and would have destroy'd the Senate itself, and Rome with it, rather than not have demolified Cicere; but Cicere unmask'd their Defigns, ftripp'd off their popular Coverings, defeated their iniquitous Pro-jects, and fav'd the Republick. May Britain never be without fuch a Cicero to prefide at her Helm! Should fuch a Calamity ever befal us, we must foon expect to fall a Prey to these popular Deceivers, these infidious, self-made Tribunes; which Heaven avert!

ONE of the Letters which brought the News of the Revolution at the Court of Petersbourg begins

I am impatient to acquaint you. Sir, that the Divine Providence has just deliver'd Russia from our hateful Regent, who, prompted by his Pride and infatiable Ambition, has not scrupled to impose upon the Imperial Family, and to increach upon its just Rights and Prerogatives. To prevent his detestable Designs from taking Essect, the Velt Marshal the Count de Munich, after a Meeting with the Emperor's faithful Ministers, went Yesterday Morning, being Sunday the 20th of November, to the Duke of Courland's Apartment, and fignify'd to him that he was his Prisoner; upon which the Duke in a great Passion chapp'd his Fland upon his Sword to defend himself; but the Count de Munich calling in the several Officers that follow'd him, he was instantly disarm'd, and carried with his Wise and Family to the Fortress of Schlusselbourg, where they are strictly confin'd; and some of the Duke's Favourites are likewise committed thicher. The whole City of Petersbourg rings with Joy for the happy Change, and every Seul seems transported that the Administration of the Empire is put into the Hands of the Princess Anne, which was proclaim'd this Day, the 21st, by Sound of Trumpet."
